

Every Save-to-GitHub push, traced back to its job

Reconstructed from the local commit history of this workspace (`git log --all` , single branch `main`). Each row is one push event: the resulting commit SHA, its timestamp, and the job ID embedded in the commit message by the auto-commit step, where one was recorded.

458 TOTAL PUSH EVENTS	346 TIED TO A JOB ID	112 NO JOB ID IN MESSAGE	2026-03-03 to 2026-07-28 DATE RANGE COVERED

Scope of this data — read before relying on it

- Source is local git history, not GitHub's or Emergent's servers. This workspace has no `git remote` configured, so I cannot confirm from here which of these commits actually landed on GitHub, nor pull GitHub's own push timestamps (which can differ slightly from commit time). What's shown is commit time, which is what the Save-to-GitHub action stamps at push time in this setup.
- Only one branch exists locally (`main`). Every event below is on `main` — there's no evidence of other branches in this clone.
- 346 of 458 commits carry a job ID (pattern `auto-commit for <uuid>`) and each job ID here is unique — every attributed job pushed exactly once, no job pushed twice. The remaining 111 say only "Auto-generated changes" with no job ID recoverable from the message, plus 1 initial commit.
- The job "tree" (parent/child session hierarchy) itself isn't visible from this filesystem — that lineage lives in the Emergent platform's job/session backend. The `claude.ai` Emergent connector could supply that hierarchy plus authoritative push confirmations, but it isn't authorized in this session. Ask the user to connect it via `claude.ai` connector settings to cross-reference or extend this ledger.
